

The Seattle Times
Winner of Nine Pulitzer Prizes

Columnists

EXHIBIT 5

DATE 2/18/15

HB 477

Three years after our assisted suicide
law went into effect
here in Washington State, this article
came out in our largest paper,
suggesting euthanasia
for people who didn't save enough money for their old age.

Originally published Wednesday, March 7, 2012 at 6:46 PM

Planning for old age at a premium

Preparing for longterm care is difficult — even for those who can afford insurance plans.

Jerry Large

Seattle Times staff columnist

Monday, I suggested exploring long-term health insurance as a way to deal with the cost of assisted living.

Like almost everything about managing when you can no longer live on your own, insurance can be complicated, frustrating and inadequate. Lots of readers shared stories about their experiences.

It was an email from a reader that led to the column. Roslyn Duffy wrote about her mother, who ran out of money and had to turn to Medicaid. She was told she'll have to move because the assisted-living facility where she lives no longer accepts Medicaid.

Care is expensive. I had no idea how costly until my wife and I began to deal with parents who needed it.

We didn't know about the paperwork and bureaucracy, or the difficult hunt for quality care that was accessible to people who hadn't managed to get rich. It's like college hunting — but with no joy attached to it.

There are good places out there, but they're harder to get into and usually cost more. Some of the most desirable places take Medicaid clients, but placements are limited.

The only certainty is that nothing is universally true.

The problem of what to do with old people who need help is a creation of modern society that we haven't committed ourselves to solving. It's almost like a monster that you don't believe exists until you answer its knock at your door.

After Monday's column, some readers were unsympathetic, a few suggested that if you couldn't save enough money to see you through your old age, you shouldn't expect society to bail you out.

At least a couple mentioned euthanasia as a solution.

But most readers were glad the topic was raised. Out of sight, out of mind is no way to deal with something so important.

So here's the deal. If you are rich, it's not a problem. If you are poor, Medicaid will pick up the tab for a nursing home.

If you are somewhere in the middle, you may want what the rich have, but be able to afford only what the poor get — and only until your money runs out, and then Medicaid will step in.

Insurance for long-term care is supposed to provide some security for people who are not quite

- Margaret Dove

- so if you work hard all
your life,
pay taxes
and your pension
plan
goes broke -

this is how society
pays
you back?

- No one talked like this before our assisted suicide
law
went into effect 1/2